MOORREESBURG

Situated approximately 90 kilometres (60 minutes) to the north of Cape Town, Moorreesburg is an idyllic rural town in the Western Cape province of South Africa.

Established in 1879 on the farm Hooikraal, Moorreesburg was administered by a village management board from 1882 and was granted municipal status in 1909. Now, the town is the seat of government for the Swartland Local Municipality in the West Coast District Municipality.

Moorreesburg is a strategic processing and logistics hub for wheat, one of the major crops cultivated in the region.

The significance of wheat to the town is encapsulated in the Moorreesburg Wheat Museum, which commemorates its importance to the local economy.

KORINGBERG

Just 15 kilometres from Moorreesburg along the N7 to Piketberg, and an easy hour's drive from Cape Town, lies the picturesque village of Koringberg, cradled by the wintergreen and summergold wheatfields of the district.

Koringberg's history is closely tied to the church, as it was originally known as Warren's camp, established after splitting from the Dutch Reformed church in nearby Moorreesburg and Hopefield. It wasn't until this community gained its own identity that it was recognised as the town of Koringberg.

DID YOU KNOW?

The town of Moorreesburg was named after J.C. le Febre Moorrees, the minister of the Swartland Nederduitse Gereformeerde Kerk who led the congregation from 1833-1881. In 1909, the settlement was recognized as a municipality. As the "breadbasket of the Cape", Moorreesburg plays a critical role in the processing and logistics of wheat and oats. The Wheat Museum in the town is a reminder of the significance of the wheat industry to the community. Situated just 15 kilometres from Moorreesburg along the N7 to Piketberg and an easy hour's drive from Cape Town lies the charming village of Koringberg. Originally known as Warren's Camp, the community broke away from the Dutch Reformed church in neighbouring towns Moorreesburg and Hopefield in 1923, thus forming its own identity and taking the name Koringberg, which is Afrikaans for 'wheat mountain'. Surrounded by wintergreen and summer gold wheatfields, Koringberg is a 118-kilometre north-north-east of Cape Town.
